CARLISLE — More than 100 distinguished military and civilian guests will attend the Eighth Annual National Strategy Seminar at the United States Army War College, today through Friday.

The seminar provides a forum for an exchange of views and ideas on nationally significant problems among outstanding Americans, representing various fields of endeavor, and members of the college.

During the course of the four-day event, students and guests will hear addresses from Elvis J. Stahr Jr., secretary of the Army; Gen. Lyman L. Lemnitzer, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; Gen. George H. Decker, chief of staff, U.S. Army; McGeorge Bundy, special assistant to the President for National Security Affairs; and Lyman B. Kirkpatrick, executive director, Central Intelligence Agency.

The seminar is the culmination of the 10-month course of study, during which the students of the college are prepared for future assignments to key staff and command positions within the government. Through means of the seminar, and the participation of guest authorities from many varied fields, constructive thought is stimulated and a national strategy and a supporting military program are developed.

Guests are integrated into each of the 14 student committees, and participate fully in committee discussions. Throughout the year the students have been working toward a national strategy; during the four-day seminar the members of the class refine and finalize their draft national strategies in collaboration with the civilian and military guests.

Major Gen. William T. Train, commandant of the War College, hopes and expects that the guests will "go away with a better understanding of some of the national security requirements facing this nation and what we are doing to develop future national leaders to assist in dealing with these requirements."

Gen. Train further stated, "I believe the guests will depart with a renewed confidence in the statesman-like ability of the military leaders which the Army and other services have been and are producing. I'm eagerly looking forward to welcoming our guests and hearing their views in this matter of national strategy which is becoming more and more important to the nation with each passing day."
